The Print Center Announces Two Fall Exhibitions

A Kaleidoscopic View: Recent Prints from Graphicstudio

and

Ukrainian Photography Today

September 16 – November 12, 2022

PHILADELPHIA, PA – The Print Center is pleased to announce the opening of two fall exhibitions, A Kaleidoscopic View: Recent Prints from Graphicstudio and Ukrainian Photography Today, on view September 16 – November 12, 2022. A Kaleidoscopic View showcases recent work created at Graphicstudio – the renowned studio at the University of South Florida – by 19 contemporary artists. Ukrainian Photography Today is presented in response to the ongoing war in Ukraine and highlights the work of four women-identifying artists, all working with subjects and themes whose relevance is amplified in times of need.
A Kaleidoscopic View is part of a longstanding series in which The Print Center highlights studios and publishers whose work transforms the field of print. Organized in four thematic sections, the boundary-pushing prints examine themes of abstraction, socio-political commentary, climate change and social justice using a wide variety of processes and styles. Among the works included is the newly published Life During Wartime Portfolio, which responds to the challenges and realities of life during a global health crisis.

Ukrainian Photography Today, sheds light on the enduring creativity and resilience of Ukrainian artists in times of war. Mounted in solidarity with the Ukrainian people, the exhibition presents impactful works shaped by a feminist lens. The photographs are centered around themes of identity, motherhood and family connection, situated at the crossroads of joy and grief, permanence and loss.

A Kaleidoscopic View: Recent Prints from Graphicstudio
Opening on September 16 in The Print Center’s second floor galleries, A Kaleidoscopic View: Recent Prints from Graphicstudio will feature recent work from this unique print studio located at the University of South Florida (USF), Tampa and will include works by Diana Al-Hadid, Ingrid Calame, Sandra Cinto, Iva Gueorguieva, Trenton Doyle Hancock, Glenda León, Christian Marclay, Josiah McElheny, Ibrahim Miranda, Duke Riley and William Villalongo as well as the Life During Wartime Portfolio, created in response to the global pandemic, with works by Sebastiaan Bremer, Jake and Dinos Chapman, Mark Thomas Gibson, Ellen Harvey, Deborah Kass, Hew Locke and Narsiso Martinez. This exhibition is one of a longstanding series in which The Print Center highlights studios whose work transforms the field of print.

A Kaleidoscopic View: Recent Prints from Graphicstudio explores the wide variety of works created there in the last decade, emphasizing the studio’s mastery of technique, including cyanotype, intaglio,
The sky is the limit at Graphicstudio, where master printmakers work with artists to support their exploration of content and form to realize their unique vision. Materiality is highlighted through the use of texture as in Mirages: The Hidden Story of the Broken Sidewalk by León. Bold color is also a significant element in many of these works, as seen in Calame’s Willa at 10 years old, 7/12/17 and Hancock’s Give Me My Flowers While I Yet Live. Time and again, the prints emerging from Graphicstudio showcase the atelier’s ability to handle any technique, from traditional 2D to experimental 3D, as well as their generous commitment of resources for optimal realization of projects. While fluency in technique is foundational to any print studio, this exhibition draws attention to Graphicstudio’s grasp of content as something that truly sets them apart. The subjects of the prints included in this exhibition are timely – ranging from climate change to social justice. The artists engaged by Graphicstudio have their fingers on the pulse of current events, and their works stand as bastions of our pivotal moment in history.

The exhibition will be organized thematically. In the second floor North Gallery, works by Al-Hadid, Calame, Cinto, Gueorguieva and McElheny investigate the potential of abstraction to mediate reality. Al-Hadid is often inspired by architecture, chiefly that of her native Syria. Reigning Queen is a two-run print made in three stages. In the first, Al-Hadid worked directly on a copper plate to create a background image using spitbite, a type of aquatint which is an etching process. Once the plate was printed, Hadid painted gold leaf onto the surface of the print, which was then photographed. The resulting photograph was used to make digital color separations, and screens were cut of the separated layers. The last step was to screenprint with gold leaf to realize the final print.

In the Zemel Family Gallery, the east wall highlights the use of specific techniques: cyanotype used in the work of Marclay and pigment-cast Hydro-Stone and dye sublimation printed on aluminum in a piece by León. Marclay’s cyanotype is a multiple-exposure photogram in which the artist “draws” with cassettes and unfurled tape. No two compositions are alike. León employs dye sublimation, a digital printing technique that uses heat to transfer an image onto a substrate – in this case aluminum, which provides a rigidity to the work.
The south wall features the works of Hancock and Riley. Both artists address serious subjects using playful color palettes and cartoon-like lines. Riley’s Monkey Biz weaves historical and contemporary references into a dense, satirical maritime scene with fantastic characters. It provides sharp social commentary, referencing globalism, capitalism and ecology as consumer culture wreaks havoc on Earth’s oceans and other natural resources.

The west wall addresses socio-political commentary with works by Miranda and Villalongo. A world-renowned woodblock printer, responsible for revitalizing Cuban printmaking in the 1990s, Miranda uses found maps in his works, often reimagining the island of Cuba to reveal its many influences on art and culture. Isla laboratorio o 7 maravillas (Island Laboratory or 7 Wonders) relocates the seven wonders of the world to Cuba, insinuating that the island has much more to offer than meets the eye.

Works by Bremer, Chapmans, Gibson, Harvey, Kass, Locke and Martinez from the Life During Wartime Portfolio are displayed in vitrines throughout the exhibition. The portfolio is a tangible result of a virtual exhibition titled Life During Wartime: Art in the Age of Coronavirus, mounted by the USF Contemporary Art Museum in June 2020. For the portfolio, the artists responded to the realities of life in a global health crisis, conveying images mixed with trauma and hope.

Ukrainian Photography Today

Also opening on September 16, Ukrainian Photography Today will feature work by Alena Grom, Oksana Parafeniuk, Yelena Yemchuk and Kateryna Yermolaeva – four leading photographers from Ukraine. Together, they present work that touches upon themes that are relevant in times of need, including the fragility of childhood, the volatility of motherhood, the hopefulness of youth, the importance of family connections and the urgency of care. Grom, Parafeniuk, Yemchuk and Yermolaeva – all women-identifying artists – exemplify the creativity emerging from Ukraine and its artists dispersed to other parts of the world, as well as gesture to the various feminist positions that exist within Ukrainian art.
The exhibition is curated by Dr. Ksenia Nouril, a specialist in contemporary Eastern European art, with exhibition advisor Irina Glik, a Ukrainian-American photographer, educator and writer. Glik approached The Print Center to discuss potential collaborations in support of Ukraine immediately after Russia’s invasion in late February 2022. We were honored to initiate this partnership with Glik, and a week later launched an Instagram takeover with her. On each Sunday in March, Glik shared a thorough and insightful post focused on a different female Ukrainian photographer, to honor Women’s History Month as well as to stand in solidarity with Ukraine. This takeover introduced us to Grom and Parafeniuk, both of whom are exhibiting artists in Ukrainian Photography Today.

Now, more than ever, it is crucial to outwardly support artists from Ukraine. This exhibition, which came together in the months since Russia escalated their attack on Ukraine, is one expression of Ukrainians’ unflagging creativity and immeasurable strength in the face of war. This exhibition is mounted in solidarity with the Ukrainian people – in Ukraine and worldwide.

– Elizabeth Spungen, Executive Director

Alena Grom’s diptychs, from the series “Pendulum,” pair an image of a baby or toddler living in the Donbas region of Ukraine with a glimpse into and around war-torn buildings. While the portrait is direct and searing, the architectural landscapes are more abstract and melancholic. As a pair, the images make up the trajectory of a swinging pendulum – moving left to right, from birth to death.

In collaged compositions, Oksana Parafeniuk combines black-and-white archival photographs with contemporary color digital images, testifying to connections across generations. Each work pictures a family unit from both the past and the present – a mother and child, a group of children. The subjects are often pictured in repose – relaxing in nature, swimming in a lake, taking walks. These are moments of unadulterated joy in the midst of the tragedy and trauma of the reality of war.
Yelena Yemchuk turns her attention to Ukraine’s youth – teenagers who have been raised in a relatively peaceful and democratic country. Now, on the eve of their adulthood, they are faced with their greatest challenge yet: surviving and thriving in a country at war. In her series “Odesa,” Yemchuk explores the mythical city on the Black Sea – famous for its beaches, nightlife and Potemkin stairs. The resulting images, which Yemchuk began making in 2015 after Russia’s annexation of the nearby Crimean Peninsula, evoke a whimsy veiled by the ominous cloud of war.

Kateryna Yermolaeva suffered an identity crisis after being cut-off from her family and home in Donbas in 2014. Dressing up as non-binary characters, she experimented with embodying multiple personalities in her series “Me, Myself, and I,” which comprises both male and female avatars. Each personality contains a piece of Yermolaeva’s own personality and has a story conveyed by the context of the photograph. Together, they form a motley crew that reimagines the composition of our society.

The Print Center thanks Irina Glik for sharing her activism, time and knowledge, as well as Stockbridge Fine Art Print for sponsoring the printing of the works in the show.

About Graphicstudio

Graphicstudio was founded in 1968 by Dr. Donald J. Saff as an experiment in art and education. Since then, they have worked with dozens of leading artists from all over the world, including Louise Bourgeois, Judy Chicago, Roy Lichtenstein, Robert Mapplethorpe, Robert Rauschenberg and Kiki Smith, to produce over 1,000 cutting-edge print and sculpture multiples in a variety of processes. The atelier remains at the forefront of international fine art publishing, supporting a diverse roster of artists who push the boundaries of print. The National Gallery of Art in Washington, DC acquired the archive of Graphicstudio in 1990. A major survey of works produced at Graphicstudio was presented at the Tampa Museum of Art in 2014. Today, Graphicstudio is part of the USF Institute for Research in Art, an umbrella organization that includes the Contemporary Art Museum and the Public Art program on campus.

About The Print Center

For more than a century, The Print Center has encouraged the growth and understanding of photography and printmaking as vital contemporary arts through exhibitions, publications and educational programs. The Print Center has an international voice and a strong sense of local purpose. Free and open to the public, it presents changing exhibitions, which highlight established and emerging, local, national and international contemporary artists. It mounts one of the oldest annual art competitions in the country, now in its 97th year, provides the Artists-in-Schools Program to Philadelphia public high school students and its Gallery Store offers a carefully selected array of contemporary prints and photographs onsite and online.
